DSLR Remote 2 is a free app which lets you remote control your DSLR camera from your iOS device. The application works by connecting a smartphone or tablet to the camera and simulating a remote control that lets you change the shutter speed, aperture, exposure, ISO and White Balance of the camera from your iOS device. The application can be used to preview and playback images you take with the camera, and can also access the camera's flash, continuous shooting mode and timelapse modes. You can also zoom in or out on the camera feed. The application is free to download, but does require you to sign up for a free account with Canon Digital Photography Hub, which is a paid service. The app is compatible with iPhone and iPad running iOS 5.0 or later, including the iPhone 4 and iPad 2. If you want to save money when buying a DSLR, check out our great collection of camera coupons. White balance: This lets you change the white balance setting, which can correct for incorrect color balance. White balance is also referred to as WB, WB/AWB, AWB, or AEWB. It can be set to Auto, Incandescent, Fluorescent or Daylight. Flash: This lets you change the camera's built-in flash, which can automatically fire to light up dark areas of your photos. Continuous shooting mode: This lets you control your camera's ability to shoot more than one photo in quick succession, for example in burst mode. Visual cortex lesions in the ferret result in impaired visual information processing during perception of natural vision and during tasks using more complex visual stimuli. Because these lesions destroy some, but not all, areas of primary visual cortex (V1), it is possible to dissociate between deficits that are directly due to damage in V1 and those that are more general. Specifically, we previously showed that the ferret lesioned as neonates, and with more widespread lesions that include V1, had difficulty processing visual stimuli. Here we compared the effects of neonatal V1 lesions on visual information processing during passive perception of visual stimuli and during the same processing tasks using more complex stimuli, including high contrast gratings and optokinetic motion. We found that the ferret lesions impaired processing of visual information in both types of tasks and did so in a similar manner, suggesting that the ferret lesioned as neonates has a deficit more generally in visual information processing.
