Shares of the tech giant tumbled this week, falling as much as 9 percent to as low as $300, depending on which metric you prefer. As a percentage of GDP, Apple's market capitalization is now $548 billion, an all-time high. But it could be heading lower still. Shares are diving on concerns about the iPhone X's lackluster sales, particularly among the company's new devices, which consist largely of a few flagship variants, according to an Apple report from Tuesday. Sales of the iPhone 8 and 8 Plus totaled 7.49 million units, down 9 percent year over year and just 10 percent over the previous quarter, according to the company's own guidance. The company's other phones—the iPhone 7 and 7 Plus, as well as the XR and SE—accounted for 16.2 million
